Ask HN: Hiring an actual user for the first time. - jmorin007 A few months ago, I decided to post this on HN because it kept coming up in google searches. I tried a few people out, and put in a few more gigs, but I think I'm getting closer now: Two things I do to gauge how competent a candidate is: 1. I ask them to do an exercise of one day of my product, and I have them email me that day's log of what they did and what they learned. 2. I have them write me an essay about some aspect of our product. So, do these work, or is it just me? ===== jmorin007 Here are the essays I got: Vany's: Highcharts's: ----- tonystubblebine If you like essays you should check out these: 1\. 2\. My one gripe about your essay idea is that only one person really needs to write. You could go through and have people write when they learn something. For the rest I think your idea is really cool, and I would be interested in sending my clients to see if they would like it. I think the one thing that separates a great designer from an average designer is a clear set of goals that they seek to pursue, and if you have more than one then you've probably got a great designer on your hands.

~~~ jmorin007 Thanks for the reply. Regarding your essay idea, I think that the main purpose of your product is to facilitate communication and coordination, and I think that almost anyone who
